From Viking Camps to Saxon Assemblies: Temporary and Seasonal Sites and Settlement in Medieval Europe

The Society for Medieval Archaeology Conference

Open to all

FRIDAY 5 – SUNDAY 7
DECEMBER 2014

DEPARTMENT FOR CONTINUING EDUCATION

From Viking Camps to Saxon Assemblies: Temporary and Seasonal Sites and Settlement in Medieval Europe

A weekend event to be held at Rewley House, 1 Wellington Square, Oxford

This weekend conference considers medieval sites that were used for brief or recurrent episodes. These types of site are often overlooked in discussions of medieval settlement, yet were critical not only in the economic exploitation of the landscape, but also in governance, trade and military conquest. Recent projects have shed new light on our understanding of previously poorly understood, yet important sites such as assembly places, markets, fairs and military camps, sites associated with transhumance, and temporary refuges. Speakers will address some of the issues that face archaeologists around recognizing and dating such occupation, the nature of short-lived buildings and other structures, and what temporary sites tell us about economic developments, changes in land use and the environment, military strategy etc. The programme will present a range of different types of temporary and seasonal settlements drawn from seven countries and diverse environments, stretching from Ireland to the Auvergne.

This weekend conference is the annual conference of the Society for Medieval Archaeology, but is open to all.
